DEADLINE ULSTER

Jail releases a key factor

AS the negotiations are moving towards their final stage, much attention has been paid to a Northern Ireland Assembly and North-South co-operation. This is a crucial stage of the political process from the perspective of all involved - from the Government and the major parties in Dublin and Belfast, to the Irish and British parliaments, and to the public at large.

In this context, the question of political prisoners is of particular importance, as it is the issue of the political process. It is important to note that the release of political prisoners is not an isolated issue, but is part of a wider context, involving issues of trust, confidence, and cooperation. The release of political prisoners is seen as a key factor in the process of恢复正常化.

What should happen to political prisoners in the event of a talks agreement? Should they be released immediately, or should they stay in jail? The Ulster Democratic Party's talks negotiator, James Wootton, argues that their release is a key element of any deal.

There are many very important issues that need to be considered in the process of releasing political prisoners. As there are different attitudes between the two communities of the island, there is no easy solution. In conclusion, the Ulster Democratic Party believes that the release of political prisoners is crucial to the process of forming a power-sharing government.

For one, it is important to note that a power-sharing government is only possible if political prisoners are released. Indeed, if the Ulster Democratic Party is committed to power-sharing, then it is necessary to release all political prisoners.

The Ulster Democratic Party proposes a phased approach to the release of political prisoners. The release of all political prisoners under the Good Friday Agreement is in order, but the release should be gradual and monitored.

The Ulster Democratic Party believes that the release of political prisoners is a key step towards a power-sharing government. The release of political prisoners would be a significant step towards a more stable and prosperous future for Northern Ireland.

Attacks bring hope of change

Dr Colin Irwin, who compiled and wrote the report on the Queen's University Belfast and the Trust opinion poll on the Belfast Telegraph last Tuesday and Wednesday, replies to his critics.

BOTH Robert Jackson, Belfast Telegraph journalist, and Dr Colin Irwin, political scientist at Queen's University, are critical of the Belfast Telegraph's report on the Queen's University Belfast and the Trust opinion poll on the Belfast Telegraph last Tuesday and Wednesday.

The Belfast Telegraph has been accused of sensationalising the results of the poll, and of not providing a balanced view of the opinions of both communities.

Dr Irwin argues that the Belfast Telegraph has not provided a balanced view of the opinions of both communities. He believes that the Belfast Telegraph has not provided a balanced view of the opinions of both communities.
