on the big issues of the day

Today, the Belfast Telegraph publishes the first of a two-part EXCLUSIVE Queen's University/Rowntree Trust opinion poll on the implementation of the Belfast Agreement. With March 10 set as the date for devolution, and the process deadlocked over decommissioning, Dr Colin Irwin (right) reports on the findings of his research.

93% SAY: MAKE THE AGREEMENT WORK

BEFORE the Belfast Agreement was signed by the government and the IRA in 1998, Bertie Acheson talked to a group of them tried to build a pluralist society in Northern Ireland in this series of public lectures.

On March 11, 1998, the first of these lectures was published in the Belfast Telegraph. Seventeen years later, the series continues in the pages of this week's Belfast Telegraph. The first part, "Politics in Northern Ireland: The history and prospects of the Belfast Agreement," is available for purchase through the Belfast Telegraph online store. The second part, "Belfast Agreement: A new chapter in the history of Northern Ireland," will be published next week.

WITHin this principle is the idea that the people of Northern Ireland will be the judges of the Belfast Agreement. What all people in the province are most interested in will be the implementation of the Agreement. This principle means that people can have a say in the future of the province, and that the Agreement makes many promises and commitments which have been incorporated into our society, and which can't be easily reversed without the consent of the people who have made them.

But why does this principle matter? A new government in Northern Ireland would be a marked change for all of us. The Agreement makes many promises and commitments which have been incorporated into our society, and which can't be easily reversed without the consent of the people who have made them. These promises and commitments are not just for the people of Northern Ireland, but for all of us.

The table of promises and commitments is impressive. It includes promises to end the paramilitary war, to ensure peace and stability, to reform the criminal justice system, to reform the political process, to ensure equality of opportunity for all, and to protect the rights of all people. It includes commitments to reform the justice system, to reform the political process, to ensure equality of opportunity for all, and to protect the rights of all people.

The Belfast Agreement is a commitment to end the paramilitary war, to ensure peace and stability, to reform the criminal justice system, to reform the political process, to ensure equality of opportunity for all, and to protect the rights of all people. This Agreement makes many promises and commitments which have been incorporated into our society, and which can't be easily reversed without the consent of the people who have made them. These promises and commitments are not just for the people of Northern Ireland, but for all of us.

The Belfast Agreement is a commitment to end the paramilitary war, to ensure peace and stability, to reform the criminal justice system, to reform the political process, to ensure equality of opportunity for all, and to protect the rights of all people. This Agreement makes many promises and commitments which have been incorporated into our society, and which can't be easily reversed without the consent of the people who have made them. These promises and commitments are not just for the people of Northern Ireland, but for all of us.

The Belfast Agreement is a commitment to end the paramilitary war, to ensure peace and stability, to reform the criminal justice system, to reform the political process, to ensure equality of opportunity for all, and to protect the rights of all people. This Agreement makes many promises and commitments which have been incorporated into our society, and which can't be easily reversed without the consent of the people who have made them. These promises and commitments are not just for the people of Northern Ireland, but for all of us.

The Belfast Agreement is a commitment to end the paramilitary war, to ensure peace and stability, to reform the criminal justice system, to reform the political process, to ensure equality of opportunity for all, and to protect the rights of all people. This Agreement makes many promises and commitments which have been incorporated into our society, and which can't be easily reversed without the consent of the people who have made them. These promises and commitments are not just for the people of Northern Ireland, but for all of us.

The Belfast Agreement is a commitment to end the paramilitary war, to ensure peace and stability, to reform the criminal justice system, to reform the political process, to ensure equality of opportunity for all, and to protect the rights of all people. This Agreement makes many promises and commitments which have been incorporated into our society, and which can't be easily reversed without the consent of the people who have made them. These promises and commitments are not just for the people of Northern Ireland, but for all of us.

The Belfast Agreement is a commitment to end the paramilitary war, to ensure peace and stability, to reform the criminal justice system, to reform the political process, to ensure equality of opportunity for all, and to protect the rights of all people. This Agreement makes many promises and commitments which have been incorporated into our society, and which can't be easily reversed without the consent of the people who have made them. These promises and commitments are not just for the people of Northern Ireland, but for all of us.

The Belfast Agreement is a commitment to end the paramilitary war, to ensure peace and stability, to reform the criminal justice system, to reform the political process, to ensure equality of opportunity for all, and to protect the rights of all people. This Agreement makes many promises and commitments which have been incorporated into our society, and which can't be easily reversed without the consent of the people who have made them. These promises and commitments are not just for the people of Northern Ireland, but for all of us.

The Belfast Agreement is a commitment to end the paramilitary war, to ensure peace and stability, to reform the criminal justice system, to reform the political process, to ensure equality of opportunity for all, and to protect the rights of all people. This Agreement makes many promises and commitments which have been incorporated into our society, and which can't be easily reversed without the consent of the people who have made them. These promises and commitments are not just for the people of Northern Ireland, but for all of us.

The Belfast Agreement is a commitment to end the paramilitary war, to ensure peace and stability, to reform the criminal justice system, to reform the political process, to ensure equality of opportunity for all, and to protect the rights of all people. This Agreement makes many promises and commitments which have been incorporated into our society, and which can't be easily reversed without the consent of the people who have made them. These promises and commitments are not just for the people of Northern Ireland, but for all of us.

The Belfast Agreement is a commitment to end the paramilitary war, to ensure peace and stability, to reform the criminal justice system, to reform the political process, to ensure equality of opportunity for all, and to protect the rights of all people. This Agreement makes many promises and commitments which have been incorporated into our society, and which can't be easily reversed without the consent of the people who have made them. These promises and commitments are not just for the people of Northern Ireland, but for all of us.

The Belfast Agreement is a commitment to end the paramilitary war, to ensure peace and stability, to reform the criminal justice system, to reform the political process, to ensure equality of opportunity for all, and to protect the rights of all people. This Agreement makes many promises and commitments which have been incorporated into our society, and which can't be easily reversed without the consent of the people who have made them. These promises and commitments are not just for the people of Northern Ireland, but for all of us.

The Belfast Agreement is a commitment to end the paramilitary war, to ensure peace and stability, to reform the criminal justice system, to reform the political process, to ensure equality of opportunity for all, and to protect the rights of all people. This Agreement makes many promises and commitments which have been incorporated into our society, and which can't be easily reversed without the consent of the people who have made them. These promises and commitments are not just for the people of Northern Ireland, but for all of us.

The Belfast Agreement is a commitment to end the paramilitary war, to ensure peace and stability, to reform the criminal justice system, to reform the political process, to ensure equality of opportunity for all, and to protect the rights of all people. This Agreement makes many promises and commitments which have been incorporated into our society, and which can't be easily reversed without the consent of the people who have made them. These promises and commitments are not just for the people of Northern Ireland, but for all of us.

The Belfast Agreement is a commitment to end the paramilitary war, to ensure peace and stability, to reform the criminal justice system, to reform the political process, to ensure equality of opportunity for all, and to protect the rights of all people. This Agreement makes many promises and commitments which have been incorporated into our society, and which can't be easily reversed without the consent of the people who have made them. These promises and commitments are not just for the people of Northern Ireland, but for all of us.

The Belfast Agreement is a commitment to end the paramilitary war, to ensure peace and stability, to reform the criminal justice system, to reform the political process, to ensure equality of opportunity for all, and to protect the rights of all people. This Agreement makes many promises and commitments which have been incorporated into our society, and which can't be easily reversed without the consent of the people who have made them. These promises and commitments are not just for the people of Northern Ireland, but for all of us.